

Source: www.babyhearing.org

Photo on page 4 courtesy of Cochlear Americas

This project is supported by the Health Resources and Services Administration (HRSA) of the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services (HHS) under grant number H61MC00065, Universal Newborn Hearing Screening, $249,678 total award amount. No nongovernmental sources support the program. This information or content and conclusions are those of the author and should not be construed as the official position or policy of, nor should any endorsements be inferred by HRSA, HHS or the U.S. Government.

ADA/AN EQUAL OPPORTUNITY/ AFFIRMATIVE ACTION EMPLOYER

06/2015

YOU ARE NOT ALONE

Help for parents coping with a child's diagnosis of hearing loss

Perhaps you have recently been told that your newborn or infant has a hearing loss. You may be feeling overwhelmed or confused....and you are searching for helpful, accurate information.

You Are Not Alone

"When we can talk about our feelings, they become less overwhelming, less upsetting, less scary. The people we trust with that important talk can help us know that we are not alone." -Fred Rogers

24,000 children are born each year in the U.S. with some degree of hearing loss. Most of these children are born to parents with normal hearing, who have had no experience with deafness or hearing loss of any kind. It is natural to feel overwhelmed and unprepared to deal with the situation. It is important to remember that you are not alone!

When we are told that our child is deaf or has a hearing loss, we normally experience a variety of emotions. These emotions may include relief, shock, fear, denial, sadness, grief, confusion, anger, guilt, disbelief, and surprise.

Uncomfortable Territory

Most of us have never had any experience with deafness or hearing loss of any kind, and therefore suddenly find ourselves launched into unfamiliar and uncomfortable territory. For chosen method of communication) may be very difficult for them. Just as you need time to adjust and adapt to the changes in your life, they too need time.

Finding Support from Other Families

We often feel very alone. Most of us do not know anyone else who has a child with a hearing loss, and we feel the need to communicate with others in the same situation.

Being able to connect with other parents who share this experience can be invaluable. There are local, statewide, and national parent organizations that parents can tie into.

Unfortunately, these resources are not available in every city and state, but because of internet access, parents all over the United States and the world are able to connect, as well as offer support.

Visit:  babyhearing.org

for more information on parent and family support resources hearing. Some of us even walk up to complete strangers who are wearing a hearing aid or signing. This quest to educate ourselves is something all parents with a child who is deaf or hard of hearing have in common.

Dealing with the Reaction of Others

In the midst of having to accept and come to terms with our child's hearing loss, we are also in the position of having to deal with the reaction of family and friends, and sometimes the community we live in. Just as each of us reacts differently, there is no way to predict how those closest to us will react.

How Grandparents React

An important thing to remember with grandparents is that not only are they sad for your child, they are sad for you as well. Just as we want to make everything right for our children, they want to do the same for us. They feel helpless and often go through their own time of grieving.

While most want to be able to support you through this time, realize that they themselves may be having a difficult time of accepting the news that their precious grandchild has a hearing loss. Seeing your child wearing a hearing aid or the thought of trying to learn a new language to communicate with their grandchild (if sign language is the many, this experience is not unlike the grief process. It is very individual; everyone reacts differently.

No Wrong Way to React

Some parents have little problem accepting the diagnosis and seem to move on without a hitch, while others find themselves struggling to come to terms with it, sometimes for an extended period of time.

Regardless of what your reaction is, be assured that it is normal. There is no right or wrong way to react.

Accepting the Diagnosis

Just as individuals react differently to the news that their child is deaf or hard of hearing, acceptance of the diagnosis is also a very individual process.

*"Grieving is not weakness nor absence of faith. Grieving is as natural as crying when you are hurt, sleeping when you are tired or sneezing when your nose itches. It is nature's way of healing."
-Doug Manning*

Tips for building resilience through the grief process:

- ◆ Stay connected with other people
- ◆ Understand that your grief is manageable
- ◆ Embrace and learn from new experiences

An Ongoing Process

Most parents describe acceptance as an ongoing process, one that comes and goes over time. When talking about acceptance, we are not just talking about accepting the hearing loss itself. We are also talking about the acceptance that life as we knew it has changed. Initially, it feels like everything has changed.

Over time, we become educated and realize that the hearing loss is merely a part of who our children are, not a definition of who they are.

We knew how to communicate with our child, and suddenly that has all changed. We had a pretty good idea of where they might attend school and dreamt of the college they would attend and the career they might pursue. Now we have no idea how to even go about educating a child who is deaf or hard of hearing, or even what options are available, let alone what the future might hold for them.

The Good News

The good news is that we do find acceptance and begin to adjust. Over time, dealing with a hearing loss just becomes a part of your family. It is still a part of your lives, but it is just that...a part of it. It is not the defining factor in your relationship with your child. It becomes comfortable and when we look at our child we no longer see the hearing loss, we see the child.

Coping Strategies

Fear of the unknown is often worse than the reality of the hearing loss. Parents are often given the news that their child has a hearing loss, but are given little in the way of an explanation of what this really means.

Making Sense of the Unfamiliar

For most parents, finding out all we can about our child's hearing and what it will mean in terms of language acquisition, communication, family dynamics, education, and social development is the key to coping.

"Hearing loss is merely a part of who our children are, not a

As we take our child from appointment to appointment, we are bombarded with unfamiliar technical and medical terms. We know we need to be asking the right questions, but don't even know what those questions are.

To make sense of it all, many of us turn to libraries, the internet or phone books to find agencies that serve the deaf and hard of